Having used its oil wealth to diversify the economy, the Kingdom of Bahrain has developed a modern infrastructure and is now the most open economy in the Gulf. The government offers excellent incentives to companies looking to reach out to other markets in the region.

With its proximity to Saudi Arabia and Qatar — both of which are just a one and a half hours drive or flight away — Bahrain has been a firm favorite for investors for 40 years. The first Gulf state to discover oil, Bahrain has successfully developed the finance, tourism and real estate sectors to keep its economy buoyant, and grows by 5% per year.

For His Highness Prime Minister Sheikh Khalifa bin Salman al-Khalifa, now is the time to deepen the relationship with Japan, Bahrain’s second-largest trading partner after the U.S., and a country with which Bahraini/Gulf companies already have a $5 billion trade surplus. “Bahrain and Japan are currently cooperating on several large projects across many sectors. The importance of this economic, capital investment, and cultural is very high,” he said.

The Kingdom’s financial and economic environment has been successful, with a bold and forward-thinking approach. Bahrain’s economy is the result of a deliberate strategy aimed at creating a global financial services hub. Bahrain has now truly emerged as a completely integrated financial hub, with a strong presence in the region and a growing reputation as a hub for Islamic finance.

The Bahrain Financial Harbour (BFH) is the largest privately owned financial and business district in the Middle East and home to more than 400 licensed financial institutions. BFH is a modern, state-of-the-art complex comprising three interconnected towers, the Harbour Mall and the Bahrain Towers, which together offer more than 28 parcels of land.

BFH is the home of Midsport in the Middle East, which is the business district’s primary event venue. The circuit is now a catalyst for developing awareness of Bahrain’s financial sector and the importance of Islamic finance.

The use of its oil wealth to diversify the economy has allowed Bahrain to develop a modern infrastructure and is the most open economy in the Gulf. The government offers excellent incentives to companies looking to reach out to other markets in the region.

The Asian market, with its growing middle class and increasing demand for financial services, presents a significant opportunity for BFH. Bahrain is well-positioned to capitalize on this demand, with its strong track record of excellence and growth in the Islamic finance sector.

BFH continues to attract large-scale projects across many sectors, including those in the financial, real estate, and tourism sectors. BFH’s continued growth and success in attracting new businesses and investors is a testament to the country’s commitment to diversification and development.
