Four centuries of historic links between Japan and Spain

In the 17th century, thousands of Japanese Christians, escaping persecution and poverty, left Japan for Spanish-controlled Manila in the Philippines, many of them eventually settling in the Americas. This migration marked the beginning of a historic link between the two countries.

These two nations represent an important cornerstone in the history of relations between Spain and Japan, as they have been influenced by each other's culture and traditions. The phrase "Four centuries..." aptly captures the essence of their historic relationship.
