A message from the Japanese Ambassador to South Korea, Koro Bessho

Japan and the Republic of Korea (ROK) have each achieved significant progress over the last 50 years. It is my belief that our two nations have influenced each other throughout the past. And our own histories have grown increasingly intertwined. In this context, the celebration of Japan-Korea relations is significant. It is significant because it affirms the importance of the Japan-Korea relationship.

Looking at the current situation in Northeast Asia, the strengthening of the Japan-Korea relationship is essential. As the world’s two largest and most successful trading partners, Japan and Korea play a critical role in regional and global trade. Our successful partnership is critical for maintaining peace and stability in the region.

As a Japanese citizen and someone who has lived and worked in Korea for many years, I have a deep understanding of the importance of the Japan-Korea relationship. I believe that our two nations have a shared vision of a prosperous and peaceful Northeast Asia.

In conclusion, I would like to express my hope that Japan and Korea will continue to work together to achieve peace and prosperity in the region. I believe that our partnership is critical for the future of Northeast Asia.
