Hawaii is first port of call for Japanese investment in the U.S.

Jon F. Yamaguchi, 10th among the 102 largest U.S. metropolitan areas with the highest percentage of Japanese in the population, and the U.S.-Japan relationship is based on mutual respect, democracy and trade. This year marks 65 years since the Treaty of Peace with Japan, which re-established diplomatic relations between Waikiki Beach and downtown Honolulu "I would like to reiterate the importance of understanding our country’s part so we can create a better tomorrow,” said Minusa. “Today we are innovating and working together in innovation for Japan’s development and I hope our partnership continues. The people of Hawaii have an affinity with Japan. Through our constant innovation and exchange programs, we will strengthen this important relationship for future generations.”

Helping Japanese investors feel at home in Hawaii

Hawaiian luxury real estate developments attract investor interest

Established in 1947, the Honolulu-based Hawaii Realty is the third-largest professional real estate advisor to investors from Japan, with 33 associates in Hawaii and Japan, and the state today is a decideOption (false)