This year’s 90th anniversary of Honda’s portfolio of activities in Canada ties the company’s past to the present and underscores the relationship and plan for the future,” said Honda’s Ambassador to Canada Kimihito Ishikane. “Relations between our countries are strong, but we need to make sure they don’t go comatose. There is huge potential on both sides in this relationship, especially as Canada continues to strengthen its role in the Asia-Pacific region. In the political security arena, we are seeing more dialogue and more ways of working together. In terms of Canada-Japan-based business, energy, technology, trading, manufacturing and controlling and communications, areas where we see huge potential, we are more deeply and more closely together, that the Comprehensive and Progressive Agreement for Trans-Pacific Partnership (CPTPP) is a free trade agreement between Canada, Australia, Brunei, Chile, Japan, Malaysia, Mexico, New Zealand, Peru, Singapore and Vietnam looks set to benefit Canada and Honda in the future.

In 2019, the Canada-Japan relationship is dynamic, on the right track, and has a good foundation to move forward. In terms of political and economic relationships between Japan and Canada, the long-term vision is to become free-trade partners. At the same time, Honda is committed to growing with Canada, and a committed contributor to the country. Honda is the first Japanese automaker to build vehicles in Canada and is a significant contributor to Canadian society. Honda will continue to build vehicles in Canada and is committed to growing with Canada as a strong contributor to the Canadian economy.
