Broadstone solutions benefit Asian businesses

As the global business environment continues to evolve, immigration has become more complex, with multinational corporations and companies looking to their advisors and partners for work assistance in navigating rules and regulations. There is no more pressing demand for immigration services.

With working capital tight and the world’s largest corporations, financial and technology firms looking to expand overseas, the need for comprehensive immigration strategies from trusted providers continues to grow. The key is to find solutions that can facilitate a profitable venture.

Since the last 20 years, the firm’s problem-solving, innovative, and established thought leaders in immigration have enabled Fragomen to become an industry leader.

Fragomen offers a range of immigration services, including: employment-verification services, private client services, as well as services relating to government regulations, immigration compliance, training, employment license and work permit applications.

Offering support in over 100 countries, Fragomen has more than 500 immigration-focused professionals and staff and more than 80 offices across the globe.

The Asian-Pacific region is serviced through a network of 12 regional offices, and the United Kingdom branch has offices in London and Sheffield.

Around 180,000 jobs have been created in the United Kingdom by approximately 2,000 Japanese companies, according to the United Kingdom’s Home Office.

With Brexit and a new immigration system, significant changes have been made to the United Kingdom’s immigration landscape,” said Rakas Takasashi, manager of Fragomen’s Japan Practice.

“With additional immigration concerns, introduced by the new regime of Brexit, the challenge is to navigate the impact of the pandemic, it is crucial for Japan-based companies to understand the current immigration climate in the United Kingdom and remain compliant with new post-Brexit regulations, especially relating to hiring European Union nationals,” the firm said.

Through close contact with Japan’s leading immigration-focused professionals, a dedicated immigration-focused practice offers strategic consultative services and support in Japan to meet the full spectrum of business immigration needs in the United Kingdom and across the globe.
